PERU A PROGRESSIVE STATE

Two South American Republics Ship
Exports Worth $126,000,000—Their Imports Are $104,000,000, and the United States Furnishes Only 15
Per Cent—Mining Chief Industry.

The following article upon the industrial progress of Chile and Peru was prepared under the direction of John Barrett, director, from information available in the library of the Bureau of American Republics:

Argentina has been compared to an expanded Dakota; or, if the snow and cold of that Northern State must be considered, it is better to think of Texas, with its field, its pastures, and endless vistas. For almost 80 miles after leaving Buenos Ayres, due west toward Chile and the Pacific Ocean, the traveler sees cattle, wheat, alfalfa, and sheep, on a level plain, over which the railway easily transports these products to tidewater. After leaving this agricultural land, the road enters the mountains, the Andes are crossed at the height of eternal snows—it is no longer plain, but peaks and valleys—and this is the difference between Argentina and Chile.

From Antarctic to Tropics.

Chile is 2,500 miles long. All this stretch on the coast is accessible to the sea. Chile has already 2,300 miles of railway, and is rapidly extending her system, and that soon there will be trans-Andean rail routes into Argentina and Bolivia, and a longitudinal line traversing practically the republic from end to end. The ultimate purpose is to connect Punta Arenas, on the Straits of Magellan, with the tropics; a rail system over which, as well as over the coastwise steamers that today convey most of the traffic, can be carried the sheep, the wheat, and the crops of the temperate zone, to exchange with the nitrates, the copper, and the cotton; for Chile can grow everything, and is rich in minerals.

For the last fiscal year reported, the foreign trade of Chile amounted to $176,000,000, of which $73,000,000 were imports and $103,000,000 were exports. Of the imports into Chile, the United States furnished 9.92 per cent, Great Britain 37.71 per cent, Germany 25.23 per cent, France 7.5 per cent, and Australia 4 per cent, the remainder being distributed among the other contributing nations. Of the exports from Chile, the United States took 15.29 per cent, Great Britain 35.29 per cent, and Germany 25.58 per cent. The great difference between the imports into the various sections is noteworthy.

Products of North Chile.

In the northern portion the order of importance is oils, machinery, mineral products, although this is the great mineral region; but as yet only the crude material is produced; the manufactured article of iron, steel, and copper being cheaper when imported than when made at home. In the commercial, pastoral, and agricultural sections of Middle and Southern Chile textiles head the list, while machinery and vegetable products follow.

The exports from the republic are a considerable item, even omitting for the moment the mineral wealth. Horses and mules are exported in large numbers, $500,000 worth of honey and wax was shipped away last year, most of it going to Germany; of animal products, hides, wool, etc., the amount was $3,000,000; of vegetable products, wheat, barley, beans, etc., $2,000,000; while other crops traceable to the fields produced a surplus for export of $1,000,000.

Chile is not given credit for such agricultural riches, yet she is entitled to it. There are 15,000,000 acres which might be used for agriculture and grazing, but only 25,000,000 are thus employed. If Chile reached a population equal to that of France (Chile to-day has about 4,000,000), she would have $4,000,000, and could nourish them all from the soil. Above this area for crops and cattle, however, are 60,000,000 other acres which are not arable, but supply minerals.

Mining Chief Industry.

Of all the industries in Chile, that of mining is the most important. This, with agriculture, is the basis of national prosperity. From the point of view of the variety of products of the mines, few countries offer such opportunities for business as Chile. Nearly all the known metals of the world are found here, but among these the most important is nitrate of soda. The mining of nitrate is divided into about 100 large contracts, the government making an annual allotment for the working of new nitrate lands. The industry employs about 35,000 workmen. The principal consumers are Great Britain, Germany, France, and the United States. Nitrate is used for agriculture and industrial value, being used for fertilizer and for chemical products.

It is estimated that if the world's annual consumption be stated to be 5,000,000 tons, the deposits in Chile will supply the world for 250 years. During the last commercial year the world's consumption was 26,000,000 quintals of 100 pounds each. Chile exported $50,000,000 of nitrates. But this is by no means all the mineral output. Of copper, about $8,000,000 worth of the country; of iodine, nearly $3,000,000; of borax, about $1,000,000; and of gold, about $1,000,000.

Peru Reaches Both Seas.

Peru has one great advantage over all the South American republics, except Colombia. She has a coast line on the Pacific 1,300 miles long, with harbors capable of carrying for all the shipping of the western slope, but in addition Peru has a port on the Amazon, Iquitos, 2,300 miles from the Atlantic, but practically a seaport, because here can be loaded the products of the great interior, both vegetable and mineral, and sent, without transshipment, to all other nations of the world.

For the last year the exports of Peru were about $25,000,000, and the exports nearly $25,000,000. The country is recognized as a highly mineralized region, and tradition has made Peru the home of much of the wealth of the Incas, and the spot from which Pizarro enriched Spain. This is true to-day. Copper and silver are the leading metals. One large mining company produced forty tons of pure copper a day, and this increases every year. In 1906 $5,000,000 worth of copper was produced, nearly $5,000,000 of silver, nearly $1,000,000 of gold, and over $1,000,000 of petroleum. Besides these are valuable deposits of lead, quicksilver, iron, tin, and sulphur. Peru is blessed above many of her neighbors in having accessible and already worked deposits of all kinds of coal. Petroleum, also, is produced in a modern, commercial way, so that she is one of the lucky few not compelled to go abroad for illuminating oils.

Agriculture Shows Progress.

Yet the mistake is too often made of supposing that Peru has her claims to wealth upon such exhaustible resources as minerals. Her exports for the last year show how progressive the country is agriculturally. There were exported 100,000 tons of sugar, 10,000 tons of cotton, 4,500 tons of wool, 2,500 tons of rubber, and 7,000 tons of coca. Her agricultural products in 1906 amounted to $20,000,000.

even greater than the mineral output; her cotton goes to England, her sugar is famous, and some travelers claim that the forests of the upper branches of the Amazon will in time be the rubber center of the world.

Peru has about 1,200 miles of railway, and much of the best engineering skill has been shown in building them. Here Meigs, the American, first scaled the Andes, and has demonstrated that nothing is impossible for steam. The central backbone of the country is reached by two lines, one running from Mollendo, at the south, to end on the shores of Lake Titicaca, the highest navigated body of water in the world, bounding Peru and Bolivia; the other, starting from Callao, passing through the capital city, Lima, to ascend to the Cerro de Pasco region, where most of the mines are. A portion of these will finally become links in the Pan-American railway. Ambitious plans are practically completed for connecting the coast with the Amazon territory, by a short cut across the Andes in the upper (northern) corner of the republic, and this will open up new industries, as well as give employment and homes to thousands of future Americans.
